On March 13, 1997, Jackson was interviewed telephonically by D. Miller, after being advised of the identity of the interviewer and the purpose of the interview.

Jackson received four telephone calls dialed from the residence of David Coffin on December 9, 1996 at 10:49 AM, 2:42 PM, 5:27 PM, and again at 6:01 PM. Jackson indicated that she remembered she had met Coffin at a party at the Georgian Terrace on November 8, 1996. Jackson indicated she had a date at this party and that Coffin indicated that he also had a date. Jackson and Coffin engaged in small talk at the party and Jackson ended up giving Coffin her work and home telephone numbers. Jackson indicated that Coffin pointed out his date the night of November 8 and this person is described as having dark hair and being approximately 5' 7" or less. According to Jackson, Coffin told her he was "dating someone who wanted more out of a relationship than he wanted."

Coffin placed many phone calls to Jackson between November 8, and December 9, 1996. According to Jackson, Coffin invited her to lunch and dinner and seemed to be quite interested in establishing a relationship with Jackson. Jackson indicated, however, she had a feeling that she did not want to get involved with Coffin; therefore, she continuously turned him down.

Concerning a message left on her voice mail on December 9, 1996, Jackson indicated that Coffin's voice sounded "stressed." According to Jackson, Coffin said, "I hope it's not something I said. Please give me a call. I was concerned about whether or not you were still alive and I hope to hear from you soon." Jackson indicated she did not return Coffin's call and upon hearing the news of his death on December 11, 1996, she was shocked. However, she was relieved that she had not begun a relationship with him.

When asked if Coffin sounded as though he had been drinking, Jackson indicated, "definitely not."
